Part I

Pain is beauty.

Paint is healing.

When my therapist and cousin passed, I painted at home for days, using mediums to express emotions I never felt.

My therapist balanced my emotion, and was gone.

Journaling served as an escape but writing between the lines wasn't healing anymore. I journaled on clothes, televisions etc., using different mediums to reach emotional depths.

I accent pieces with orange colors to turn the volume up: scream without screaming. Blue calms me and keeps balance internally. Green represents, nature, life, and good spirits. Yellow balances my art, providing optimism and faith.

I will add more yellow to my future works and life.

Part II

I attempted watching tv for entertainment. I wrote “I stopped watching tv cuz the stuff in my head more interesting” in the middle of my bedroom tv screen. I genuinely felt like that.

News and media outlets depiction of black people is disgusting. Constant psychological and mental trauma through media is genocide.

Add social media we all fried.

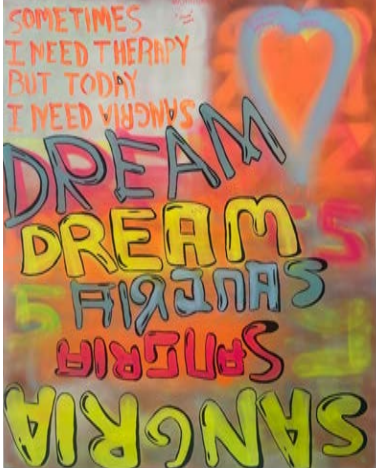

I used televisions as journals to express.

I hope I inspire people to use different colors and mediums to express themselves for less anxiety and more freedom.

I need therapy too.
